In this year a Challenge Cup, value £50, was given by the Gunmakers' Company of London, and a Purse of £10 was given by the NRA. The Cup and Purse were to be awarded to the highest scorer.

In the early years, the rules provided for a Captain, a substitute (who shall replace the Captain in case of death or illness during the year of the Match) and (if the Captain thinks fit) an officer to command his firing party. The rules in 1877 talk of an Adjutant rather than substitute and drop mention of an officer in charge of the firing party. They also talk of "two other representatives" who with the Captain are members of the Council of the Match. Sometimes these two other representatives are referred to as the two Lieutenants and this goes some way to explaining why there are sometimes two Adjutants.

In 1867 the Scottish had a deputy Captain - E Ross.

“Capt Gow secretary of Edinburgh and Midlothian Association and Capt Lockhart of West of Scotland Association argued for their men with the Master of Lovat (ref 50 years of IT p226).”

Gow and Lockhart may have been selection committee and Adjutants in place of Ross. We have favoured Ross since the idea of “two other people” did not come until 1877.

For Scotland - Lt Col MacDonald and Capt J Barker Duncan aided Mr Dunlop in selection of the XX (VSG 28.6.1873 p 547).

Committee of Lt Col MacDonald, Lt Col Wilson, Lt Gow, QM Henry and secretary recommended names of XX to Captain.

It is not clear who was Adjutant MacDonald or Duncan - hence the blank space.

Pte J Clews, 3rd Renfrew, was selected for Scotland but did not shoot and was replaced by Capt J Easton.

Cpl Bell, 32 Staffs, was selected for Ireland but did not shoot.
